

Your library at the heart of research:

Key opportunities to make an impact

Findings from a survey of 300 researchers and interviews with senior members of research offices in the United States, the United Kingdom, and Australia.

Researchers are overall satisfied with the level of support provided by the library

Very satisfied

However, researchers indicate that they feel time poor, lonely and stressed, and overwhelmed by too many tasks beyond their research work.

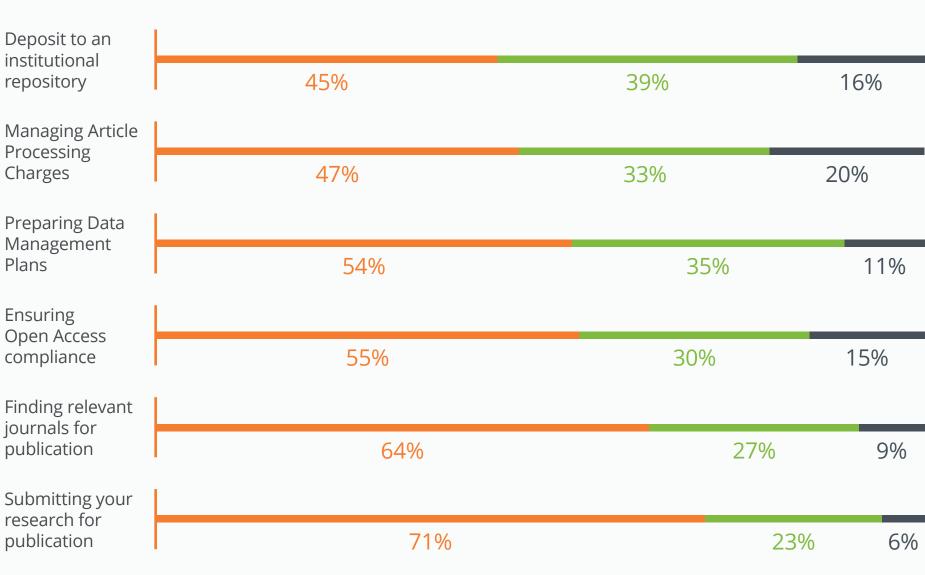

Key opportunities for research libraries

Researchers conduct tasks themselves in areas where libraries can provide valuable expertise and administrative support

Can your library play a bigger role in the following areas?

Who helps researchers with their tasks? Base: All respondents (300)

I do this myself I do some of this, but I also have Someone else at my institution help from someone else does this on my behalf

Mind the gap: Researchers' expectations from the library Researchers expect the library to provide research data services and information literacy education. Is there a gap from the services you currently offer to researchers? Which of the following do you expect the library to do to support your role as a researcher? Base: All respondents (300) Provide research data services

Provide information literacy education

(e.g. data citation services)

Provide research impact reports

Deposit publications and datasets

Ensure compliance with regulations

Verify and enrich metadata quality

Raise awareness of research issues amongst academic staff

Other

None of the above

make it easier for researchers common, yet there is room to Publishing datasets is quite

Base: Researchers required to publish primary datasets alongside their research (178)

21%

Around four in ten

ensure compliance with regulations

"People [researchers] just don't have time to put things together, they're putting things together for tenure, then for this, then for that, then they're expected to go and fill this form out online."

Read the full Ex Libris study here.

Assistant Vice-Provost, US